PERSONAL STATEMENT

Judith Lillis was born and raised in Massachusetts, where she was first introduced to the camera by her father, who often transformed the only bathroom in the house into a darkroom.

At age 12 she was the proud owner of her first camera, a Brownie Hawkeye.

Fast forward to 1968, when she married and moved to California, where her husband taught her the intricacies of his 35 mm Petrie Racer. With the spectacular wonders of the national parks as a backdrop, she was hooked. In 1978, she moved with her husband and three children to Leesburg, where she contented herself as the family photographer.

Self-taught, Judith's passion for photography blossomed into a business by 1996. Her love of history and photography combine to tell a story through her images. Judith is both an award-winning and published photographer with works appearing in publication of The National Trust For Historic Preservation, Loudoun Magazine, and The Loudoun Chamber of Commerce. The artist's works were featured at The Atlantic Gallery in Georgetown in 2000 and at The Potomac Gallery in Leesburg in 2003.

Through her lens, Judith endeavors to reveal the mystery of the past etched in light and shadow of landscape and stone.
